Linking Words: Because / So

Instructions: Read the information in the box. Then complete the sentences with the correct connector. (Remember to use a comma before "so".

The diagram illustrates the relationship between two clauses. On the left, a grey arrow curves from the first clause to the second, indicating that the first clause happens first. The text reads: "I went to bed because I was tired." Below this, it says "It is the result of feeling tired." On the right, a grey arrow curves from the second clause back to the first, indicating that the second clause happens first. The text reads: "I was tired, so I went to bed." Below this, it says "It is the reason for going to bed." Both examples include a small cartoon character of a woman with glasses.
